

Who, What, Where, Why & When?

Understanding the Religious and Political Origins of Evangelical Climate Change Skepticism

THUR, FEB 6 • 12:00 NOON • WEST HALL 135 • ASU TEMPE CAMPUS

Professor Robin Veldman (Texas A&M) emphasizes how climate skepticism and anti-environmentalism have become embedded in evangelicals' social world and, in particular, tied to their sense of embattlement with secular culture.

Instead of seeing evangelicals' higher rates of climate skepticism as being due either to politics or to religion, Veldman highlights how Christian right leaders have actively promoted misinformation about climate change to evangelical audiences, for reasons that, she suggests, are tied to their own political ambitions.

This event is free and open to the public, but RSVPs are kindly requested.

To RSVP and for more information, visit robinveldman.eventbrite.com

ASU® Arizona State University

Sponsored by the School of Historical, Philosophical and Religious Studies
and the Center for the Study of Religion and Conflict